

The Stewart L. Wiggins Loan

Dr. Stewart Wiggins was an alumnus of the Junior College of Augusta who earned his Ph.D. in experimental psychology at the University of Georgia. He later held a joint appointment between the Medical College of Georgia (two-thirds) and what was then known as Augusta College (one-third).

After his death, his widow established the Stewart L. Wiggins Loan specifically for psychology majors to help them cover certain financial needs more quickly than could be done by other sources of financial aid.

Through the years, many students have benefited from the loan, which is administered by the Business Office at Augusta State University and several faculty members in the Department of Psychology. Unlike many sources of financial aid, however, the ability of the Department of Psychology and Augusta State University to continue to offer the Wiggins loan depends on students' prompt repayment of the loan. If students fail to meet their repayment obligations, this may make the loan unavailable to other students due to a shortage of funds. Although the Business Office requires a legal contract covering the terms of repayment, it is important for students who get the loan to recognize their individual responsibility to other current and future students who may apply for the loan.

We therefore ask that each student who receives the Wiggins loan acknowledge this responsibility to help us follow the wishes of the Wiggins family and ensure that the loan will continue to be available to others by signing below.
